HUZZAH!!!

I just checked the forum and Jeff posted that they found some more stock laying around of some out of stock items, so i dash to the on-line store but can only remember 1 item he had listed as being back in stock: 6x6 floor tiles, so i check, they are indeed back in stock!! so i grab some.....

Then i check 6" walls - they're in stock too!!! So i grab some of these too!!!

WOW! 6x6 floor tiles and 6" walls - too good to be true!

AH, how I have been dying for more 6" walls!

Thank goodness for the occasional inventory error!

Thanks Jeff!

Harneloot,

Greetings, I have to say that the 6X6 floors and the 6" walls (Along with 90 deg corners), are some of THE best basic pieces to have extras of... Snag them up they are so incredibly useful...

Hmmm... Venerable... Ouch that's what I call old people...Chuckle... Take nothing I say as more than personal opinion, ask others around here I have lots of opinion, on most every topic...

But seriously, the usefulness of the pieces you just snagged can not be over stated... They will allow (Obviously), for you to have more medium sized rooms down on the table at any given time... But, the other great thing about having lots of 6" walls, is that you can use them as corriodors too, which means rooms built right off the corridor so to speak...

That shaking you feel is NOT an earthquake; it's ME jumping up and down and screaming "Right On, MLV! Right On!"
6" walls and floors are GREAT; less joints, larger spaces. Just remember, to be prototypical, those spaces need columns or other supports for ceilings and roofs. Unless they are grand arenas.
And YES, every multi-sided structure NEEDS corners, inside and out.

See ya!

I agree that 6x6 tiles are great.

There are fewer bow tie slots to fill in and paint per square inch

Good news... I have the putty in on 32 bow ties!

Bad news... I underestimated the number of bowties by 50%!!!

The putty goes in nice... the piece looks better already (even with just a black base coat)
