Materialize equipments of players Posted by Tom - 2004/04/15 17:39
Since we materialize the decorations and the characters, why not materialize equipment of the players?
i use charts and little minis
These charts are in same logic as the other elements of my play. My tendency affirmed to want to materialize a maximum of things (decorations, figurines, charts) must help the initial players to keep a contact with the concrete one. Because to begin with young people without experiment a part of roleplay is a very difficult activity which risks to reject more than one. With these visual elements at their disposal the immersion is done progressivly. if unaware of or one a weak culture of medieval fantastic, they have a rich framework under the eyes to plunge them in medieval universe.

Tom,
I saw those pictures last year. Absolutely breathtaking collections. I have a large printout of your large dungeon in my office hanging up on the wall for inspiration. Please send more pictures of your setups.

Tom,

As to Your Cards, I Agree being able to hand out Cards with an Items Stats and Abilities already Printed on the Card can Save a lot of time in Game... And You are Right about the Educational aspect as Well, my Five Year old Has Learned to Read (At least in Part) from Playing Games Like Hero Quest, Munchkin and Zombies!!! She Loves to be able to Pick a Card up and Read it... And Of Course Loves the Pictures too ...
