Snow in Michigan
Posted by Kradlo - 2006/10/12 09:13

_____

Pardon if this is off the normal topic for this section of the forum, but this links to the same named topic on Non-Gaming Talk.

I should have taken the photos earlier in the day, before the snow started to melt.

I guess it's just that "first snow in our new home" thing. :D
http://dwarvenforge.com/images/fbfiles/images/19503/Snow 4.jpg
http://dwarvenforge.com/images/fbfiles/images/19503/Snow 3.jpg
http://dwarvenforge.com/images/fbfiles/images/19503/Snow 2.jpg
http://dwarvenforge.com/images/fbfiles/images/19503/Snow 1.jpg

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by jkratzer - 2006/10/12 10:40

_____

Krad -

I love how snow looks on trees and bushes, especially if there's still leaves attached.
I can get along with snow on grass, etc.
I thoroughly dislike snow on my sidewalks.
I hate snow on my car!
I DESPISE SNOW on the roads, because half the IDIOTS here in Maryland CAN'T (&ER$% drive on it!!!

Well, okay; I despise the idiots, not the snow.
Know whut Ah mean, Vern?

See ya!

Jim

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by Kradlo - 2006/10/12 10:49

_____

Heck, folks out in California would forget how to drive in the rain if it was dry for more than a week. First rain, they'd be out tailgating like crazy. In the Bay Area, the dry season would go from April or May to October or November. That first rain, especially if it was a light rain, would loosen all the dirt and oil on the road and turn it zero-coefficient. I saw so many multi-car pileups when that happened, sometimes one big crash every twenty to thirty minutes.

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by Dante - 2006/10/12 15:35

Kradlo--beautiful pics. I love the first one and the one with the woodshed.

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by willypold - 2006/10/12 16:14

Looks pretty!

But Michigan... That's WAY south of here... and we still have something like +10 C right now and it's the middle of night right now... This is weird... It was +16 C earlier today...

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by RabidFox* - 2006/10/13 03:46

Heck, folks out in California would forget how to drive in the rain if it was dry for more than a week. First rain, they'd be out tailgating like crazy. In the Bay Area, the dry season would go from April or May to October or November. That first rain, especially if it was a light rain, would loosen all the dirt and oil on the road and turn it zero-coefficient. I saw so many multi-car pileups when that happened, sometimes one big crash every twenty to thirty minutes.
Maybe folks in the Bay Area are that way, but that is Bay Area folks for you.
Folks farther north like in Yreka, Tahoe, Susanville and the like actually know how to deal with driving and precipt.
Then again, Southern Californians that do not live in those valleys (myself included - from 1,000 feet higher than the San Fernando Valley) also know how to drive with both rain and snow on the ground.

Then again, both Jim and I both can honestly slander Marylanders and how they drive or actually hide when there is only a couple tenths of an inch of snow on the ground.
Talk about fools and their cars!

The worse place I have ever had to drive on a regular basis is the Dakotas.
Those ice storms that come down through Canada from Hudson Bay are weather I would love to miss - permanently!

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by Yukon Cornelius - 2006/10/13 07:18

Great setup, Kradlo! How did you get that snow effect? And that grill...that's a Grendel piece, right?

How many sets did you use?

;)

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by whitewind - 2006/10/23 21:18

_____

Sweet, sweet. I was born in Detroit. I mis the snow very much. That first one looks like a post card. Good camera.

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by Dante - 2006/10/24 07:39

_____

whitewind--whereabouts? I was born and raised in Southwest Detroit just about 5 minutes from the Ambassador Bridge. Small world, no? ;-}~

==========

Snow in Michigan
Posted by whitewind - 2006/10/28 22:20

_____

Well I forget the actual area that the hospital was but I live off and on " and I am not kidding " around 8 mile road. We " my mom and I " then moved many times between Philadelphia and Pontiac. Moved permanently away when I was about 7 or 8.

==========