OK, this will probably be it for awhile. At least until I pick up a passage set! Anyhoo, some of these are variations on what I've done before, but I love this kind of stacking, creating raised bridges and stuff. And then one pic because narrow, angled passages rock. ;)

Did you Hit the Sci-Fi Doors and Such with some Dry-brush? Or do they Just look a little aged because of the Lighting in the Pic?

I think it's the lighting. I didn't touch them, but I did have to use a weaker light for these pics.

Is that set of stairs part of a sci fi set or something you made yourself?

L,

I Guess So... Maybe the Light has Cast Shadows into Brush Strokes in the Paint... It Seems Like the Pics on the Web-site are Very "Silver" and Your Photos Definately have a Gold/ Bronze sorta Look... Which Is Nice For "Ship Corridor/ Cargo Bay" Kinda Antiqued with Age Look... Very David Lynchs' 'Dune' Maybe... If There were Space Hulks in Dune of Course..... Or Even an 'Unreal' Arena? Speaking of Which has anyone Used these For 'Frag' yet?

The stairs are from a plastic (Plastrux) staircase I bought at Pearl Art and Craft. I just cut off a segment and painted them up.

I think the sci-fi sets really benefit from stairs placed here and there, even if they don't lead anywhere. It just looks good to suggest that more is going on elsewhere.

Well as I Stated Earlier, (And I Agree with you), the Little Lofts you have Created are more "Logical" with access... If there is one thing I am unconvinced of in the upcoming Alpha it is the Ramp... I think I understand it, as it seems to have a similar "Foot-print" to the Stairs from the MM series, the advantage being that we ought to be able to place miniatures at any point along the Ramp instead of just on "Landings" also the Scale of the Stairs was Terrible... But as Far as the "Look" goes I Think that these "Ladder/Stair" Props are much more interesting to look at... (Yes I Know, I've got an Opinion for everything... But at least in this Case My Opinion is that you made a Great Choice with this size and Style of Ladder)...
