I've put in my application for the doctorate program for physical therapy at Grand Valley State University here in Grand Rapids, Michigan. I just got word that I've met their requirements and have scheduled an interview.

The program is highly competitive, but I'm maintained a 4.0 GPA since returning to school, so I figure my odds are good. The doctorate program will be lots of work, but it's a great career path.

I had my interview yesterday, and I'm confident that it went well. There was also an essay portion, also fine.

There are approximately 186 students competing for 48 slots. With a 4.0 GPA and my anatomical illustrations, I think my chances are excellent.

Fingers crossed for your success !!

When do you expect to receive final word ? Getting the position would certainly make it an eventful Thanksgiving !!

Good luck !!

I'll find out some time in December or early January. That's a long time of being in limbo!

Kradlo:

I had three surgeries in four years near the end of my career (two rotator cuffs an ACL). Various military related bits of wear and tear. Got 100% strength and 100% range of motion back thanks to a skilled surgeon and an extraordinary physical therapist. I wish you the best of luck with your PhD program.

Hang in there. Just finished my (JD) and I'm now looking for work. May be a good time to be in school!

Close. My sources attribute it to another individual, less known for desert military tactics: Oprah Winfrey.
