DarkProphet VIII: The Mausoleum

Posted by Kronos - 2011/03/13 09:37

Picture time! Finally my group is in a dungeon again, so I can post new stuff. :)
If you are interested in the background story of what is happening in the pictures you can visit my blog: The Dark Prophet Chronicles

Great set-up and I really like the Tentacles! Where did you find them? I want to get some.

Thank you dndgamer! :)

The 4 big tentacles are from the Well of Doom from Reaper . The small ones I don't recall. I got the idea from Law, who made excellent use of the tentacles in several posts (for example: here).

Thank you Muffin!

Yes, game night was great, lot's of laughter and fun. :) Espacially the green demon was the object of much ridicule, since he is naked and sculpted "anatomically correct", when one can say that about a demon. Even mighty heroes think twice about charging a demon with his "thingy" hanging out. ;)

Is it me or there is always something in the pictures hiding the "front" of the green demon? just kiding, ;-)

By the way, great setup as always Kronos!

Would you mind specifying where you got the 6 flaming cauldrons?

Also, how did you get the mini into the gelatinous cube? Is it the classic d&d mini that you separated from the black base with a Dremel that I did not know was empty?

Thanks...

Thank you biowizard! :)

Yeah, the demon is well covered, but that could change. He will annoy my players a little more in the next session and it's quite possible that he will make another appearing in my next post. :)

The 6 flaming cauldrons are from 3 Den of Evil Sets.

The Gelatinous Cube is indeed a D&D miniature. But you don't need a dremel, the black base is designed to be removable. But it's tricky sometimes, that's why I don't use the base anymore, the Cube is big enough on its own and one (or two) medium size miniatures can be placed inside without the annoying removal of the base. I really like the effect, my player's not so much (but I think they are biased). ;)
