Mix of DF and Hirst

I made a quick scenario to run a friend through who was unfamiliar with tabletop rpg. I gave her a level 7 human rogue and started this mini scenario. She is looking forward to the conclusion. I suppose I should hurry up and make up a conclusion.

After being chosen to investigate a strange magical anomaly by the Pathfinder society, Amaya was supposed to be teleported to the nearby village of Midthorpe. She now finds herself in some treasury of sorts. She will inventory this later. Passing through the iron door she finds herself in a sleeping chamber. It appears to be empty. She presses on. Opening the next door she comes to, she steps into a medium sized chamber filled with shelves of books with arcane ruins on the spine, scrolls, and strange potions. In the center of the room is a large pool filled with pale blue water. "I am afraid that your being here is my fault," a high pitched voice from behind the pool states, "you see, I was opening a portal just as you passed by and I regret to inform you that you were pulled into my lair".

"Who are you?" asked Amaya as her hands tightened around the hilt of her dagger.

"Me? I have been called many things...but since I will be unable to let you leave...I suppose you may call me death!"

"We will see about that wizard!" Amaya leaps onto the edge of the pool.

"Stupid girl," laughs the wizard and the pool in front of him begins to bubble. A large tentacle bursts out of the water and makes a grab for her. She nimbly leaps away.

"Finish her," commands the wizard as he vanishes into thin air.

The wizard underestimates her, she cuts the tentacle in two and heads through the velvet curtain down the passage. Swinging open the thick wooden door she peers into a large chamber.

"You have some skill...I admire that. However, it doesn't change anything," a fireball erupts from his hand but she tumbles to the corner and throws her dagger at the wizards head. It barely misses as 4 balls of white light leap from his fingertips and strike the statue behind her. He runs up the stairs and exclaims excitedly, "and this was to be a dull day...let us continue our game upstairs my dear". He turns and passes up the stairs, presumably, to the second floor.

Amaya sighs, picks up her dagger, unsheathes her sword and says, "I am already tired of this...". She follows the wizard to the upper floors.

Nice setup! Your friend is going to have a skewed impression of tabletop RPGs and think that all GMs have cool DF dungeons. ;)

Very nice! How did you attach the Hirst stairway, with poster putty? I love the pool, great job on the resin.

The stairway will stay when leaned against the wall. If bumped hard it will fall though.

Thanks for the compliments!

Some of them do. If its painted it will say on the website. In my pics the curtains and treasure came prepainted but the book shelves didn't.
