I think the website needs archives of all released sets with reference number and details.

Tom has most of those sets (details + photos) but some are still missing.

It would give ideas of what new customers missed into DF line.

I vote for this museum idea.

I'll second that.

As a new collector I have spent weeks scouring the internet, ebay and these forums for info. I've worked up all my info into a spreadsheet that has been very helpful when purchasing OOP sets from other collectors.

The old website had helpful info such as weights, prices and catalog numbers. Even though there were lots of "out of stock" items it served as a guide for value, knowing what is suppose to come with the set and stuff like that.

I know there is alot of info I don't have but would love to.
