Most of us have a lot of sets of DF, what about showing to others what it could give on a table? Lets show your biggest one...
it's the same idea than the galery on the DF web site. But i guess that many more pictures can be shown (sorry for my english...)

here mine

Hey Tom,

Don't worry about your English....it is good! Beside, we are speaking the language of DF :lol:

How did you get it to look like some rooms have fire/lava?

Chez!! You win Tom!!! :D

Like the water with alligators(?) (Bite, Bite, Drown, Drown)

I hope you have cool players who appreciate all this. Was this lay-out a "real" Dungeon that was played? or a Photo-opertunity? :D

Looks like it would be a blast to go thru.....

if i understand well, you wonder if i play these caves or if it's only for the photo?
i play it of course. I cover the dungeon and i play it with youngs players (about 14 years old) here is a example of my last play (it's in french but there are many photos)

Cool Game! I'm glad to see it actually being used! Looks like fun.

My French is non-existant. But It looks like the good guys won.

I play with older players 35++, I could never have gotten them all to sit still for a photo! Our table gets covered in junk food. Very messy. Not very photogenic. (sp?)

Covering the dungeon and revealing bits as they are seen seems to work.

I build my dungeons alone, in advance, and carefully map them. During games I only have to toss out pieces as they are discovered. I know the dimensions of our gaming table and that I've already built this dungeon before so I know I will have all the pieces needed and that it will fit.

Keep the cool pictures coming Friendly French Tom !!!.

P.S. You spell better then I do!!!!

Hey Dagger dale do you know what would kick so much ass with your setups? Felt!

That's right you can get like 3x6 feet of felt for $8 tops. And it helps the whole look of the setup. (Cause I see you tried to make the effect with the bridge and the black sheet under it)

I recommend dark brown or dark green. I'll try and take a pic of my setup and you can check out the effect. :D

Thanks for the felt tips. The setups I posted were pre-game setups. The game room has a 4X8foot gaming table with a great texture that works well with master maze. I also have a couple of binders full of felt of different colors and texture printouts of lava, water etc.

Edited:

I should also add that I found some terrific fabrics that have forsest, grasslands, sand, water and earth and stone patters that would look terrific under a setup. I found them at my local fabric store.
