

Heroes enter the dungeon!

Posted by arcanedesign - 2011/12/25 05:42

Experimenting to see what type of rooms I can build with my first set and making a list. So I can run my first campaign using Dwarven Forge products!

Would you identify the minis? All well done, but I love the in-your-face pose of the hero on the right.

Looks like you got the proper sets to make the basics, along with some furniture pieces to dress things up. You are going to love how much those simple setups will add to the game.

Then stage 2 of the addition kicks in...you will be in denial and state that you are going to stick with the small setups.

Finally stage 3 hits and the next thing you realize your whole gaming table is taken over by an elaborate and awesome setup.

Don't worry, there is no 12 step program for DF addicts, and we all understand what you are about to go through.

Jackattack, the miniature you are asking about is from reaper and entitled Dub Bullock. His pose attracted me to the model as well.

Stefan, thank you for the warm welcome and happy 45th birthday.

Arcarius, the giant hinged D20 was made by a friend as a container for gaming aids. I still need to felt line the inside and paint the outside. Still deciding on a color scheme.

Eric1971, I just got the first set and already I want wicked additions #2, the cavern set, narrow passage set, and town set. The ice cavern set should be arriving on Tuesday. I think I'm addicted and I love it. I wish I made the leap sooner.

I can't wait to get some of my drawn maps laid out in Dwarven Forge.

Welcome to the addiction!

Often, this program is very helpful in laying out predrawn maps & modifying those maps as needed to fit the DF footprints...and then you can know exactly which pieces you'll need more of :-)
