

Bandits in a ruined Keep

Posted by Kronos - 2012/08/20 07:23

Hello friends! :)

Back in May my game group and I had the luxury to play two consecutive game sessions in one weekend. We started the next big adventure of my campaign which begins as a murder on the road detective adventure (which will lead to a big dungeon in the end (after all, the game is Dungeons & Dragons ;)). And I have a feeling that there will be catacombs. Lots of catacombs. There weren't any when I first started to plan the adventure but now it seems completely illogical not to include catacombs. I don't know why. ;))

My players used the detective style start of the adventure intensely to role-play their characters and we only had one small encounter at the end of the second game session when they arrived at the ruins of a seemingly abandoned keep:

After over a year of fighting the walking dead my players where quite happy that there was not one undead in sight. :)

Good looking setup Kronos! Nice work incorporating elements from several sets. It really does look like an old, crumbling, abandoned keep. Well, except for the bugbears and bandits... I think your players may now learn to hate goblinoids. Who makes the bugbears? I like that sculpt. And again, superb paint jobs.

Thank you Arcarius2001! :)

Who makes the bugbears? I like that sculpt.

Me too! :) Those are from Reaper:

I especially like the last pair. The one with the human face on his shield is my favorite. Gruesome! :)
