

I love red pillars !

Posted by jls304 - 2011/11/28 13:43

---

So I thought I knew how versatile and awesome these were until I started building a new stacked setup with my Den of Evil sets. In the limited edition lines you don't have narrow passages with their 4 corners to lend that extra support and turning to the pillars can really help.

Just using a bunch of corner pieces doesn't always cut it for stability. I thought I had enough pillars but I'll be ordering another set of 8 when the holiday shipment comes in :)

=====

Re:I love red pillars !

Posted by granpappy77 - 2011/11/28 14:50

---

I've been meaning to pick some up, but never got around to it. Good to know I should order more than one if I'm going to try multi-level dungeons.

I clicked through the site and figured out I could spend just over $200 in the "individual pieces" section alone! Awhile back I grabbed a set of 6x6 dungeon tiles and the big blocks with chains but never grabbed pillars or any of the old traps (bowties be damned). $200 ain't so bad...maybe I'll save up some cash and my next order will be accessories/extras only. I'm sure I could find a sufficiently dastardly purpose for those water tub things from the cavernous set...I'm thinking a trap-based encounter where the tubs would be geysers, pouring out steam at pre-determined intervals, causing damage and blocking line of sight. Dang, I really need to play more often...

=====

Re:I love red pillars !

Posted by jls304 - 2011/11/28 15:02

---

Yeah they really are nice versatile pieces. If you are shopping for individual pieces you really can't ever have enough stairs or pedestals. Those used to command a high price on ebay when they were out of stock. I think I bought about 10 stair sets the last time DF got them in.

=====